U. S. District Court, Boston—March Term, 1873.

Wages, Whaling Voyage. G. W. Slocum v. Jireh Swift et al. The libellant was master of the bark Louisa, which, by the articles was "bound from the port of New Bedford on a voyage not exceeding five years in duration." By the first article it was agreed "that the term of service of any of the undersigned shall not end, and he shall not be entitled to a discharge until the expiration of said term of said New Bedford ship shall sooner be terminated by the loss of same, or the sale of the vessel, or the return of the vessel to the United States." The libellant arrived in the Atlantic and South Pacific, and was notified in the Arctic Ocean, in March, 1872, that he had received orders to take the ship to San Francisco and fit her for a cruise in the Arctic Ocean; that the libellant was not bound to serve in the Arctic, but was at the request of San Francisco and delivered her to the owner's agent, and spent eighteen days in fitting out the ship for the new service.

It was admitted that the libellant's pay, if due, was nearly six thousand dollars, and a considerable part of this was paid him before the hearing. The respondents denied that the libellant had any right to refuse to go to the Arctic, or any strict title to be paid before the return of the ship to New Bedford. Several items of charge on the part of the respondents were disputed, as is sufficiently explained in the opinion of the court. T. M. Stetson for the libellant. G. Marston for the respondents.

LOWELL, J.—In the absence of fraud the contract of the master of a whaling ship with his owners cannot be varied by parol evidence, as was decided upon full argument and intelligent research, with great acuity and Curtis examines cases against the admission of the evidence, though he differs from them and admits the parol proof on the ground that it is a matter of usage, and especially the tenth clause of the latter, mates void a contract with seamen if it does not state the age all in support of the latter clause of his proposition or rather of his second proposition, that the Admiralty Court will act solely unreasonable of such a clause, and Curtis examines the cases with great acuity and cites many

James McKenzie Master Sailed ... fic.
Spoke July 1. clean, At Fayal
Capt ... Bark ...

Capt. McKenzie, late of bark Eagle, of this port, gives the following account of the loss of his vessel.

We left Point Barrow, Arctic Ocean, at daylight on the morning of Sept 30th, and put away for Behring Strait with the intention of leaving the sea, having all our casks full. The wind was fresh from NE and the weather threatening. At 9 AM lost sight of the land, and judged from the rate at which the ship was going, that we should pass the Sea Horse Islands before noon. We were steering through scattering ice all day, and about 6 PM concluded to heave to for the night, not judging it safe to run, but seeing a heavy wall of ice to leeward, thought it best to get under the lee of it before coming to; accordingly steered for the most open passage we could see, but to our surprise the ship grounded in three fathoms water. Being confident that we were far past the Sea Horse Islands, I concluded we must be on the edge of Blossom Shoals. Immediately took in all sail and made every exertion in our power to get the ship off. but the night was so very dark and cold. and the sea so rough, that we could accomplish nothing, and about 2 AM found the ship full of water to her lower deck. The sea began to break over her, covering everything with ice, and rendering it impossible for us to remain any longer on board. We accordingly made preparations for leaving, and at daylight found, to our surprise, by looking from the mast heads, that we were on the shoal off the north Sea Horse Islands, not more than 25 or 30 miles from Point Barrow, although we had been running 13 hours before a strong wind with all drawing sail set and supposed ourselves 50 or 60 miles from that place. Just as we were leaving the ship, to our great joy, a ship came in sight, running directly for us, which proved to be the John Carver, Capt Worth, who kindly took us all on board and did all that was possible for our comfort. The crew were afterwards distributed among the barks Count Bismarck, Norman, and Roman, and have all arrived at Honolulu.
